McIntosh Laboratory Introduces The MCD201 SACD/CD Player

Binghamton, NY August 17, 2005—McIntosh Laboratory, a world leader in home entertainment systems for 56 years, introduces the MCD201 SACD/CD Player.

The MCD201 is a two channel SACD/CD Player oriented to the needs of the audiophile capable of playing SACD, hybrid SACD, CD, CD-R and CD-RW discs. Utilizing a multi-bit PCM/DSD D-to-A Converter, yielding 24 Bit PCM resolution with a wide dynamic range and extremely low distortion, the MCD201 reproduces music at any level with extreme precision. The MCD201 mechanism reads SACD’s at 2 times speed and CD, CD-R, CD-RW at 4 times speed storing the data in a buffer memory for increased error correction and tracking.

The MCD201 may be used three ways. First as a normal two channel CD player using the fixed balanced or unbalanced outputs. Secondly the MCD201 can be used in a disc only system to directly drive any power amp using the variable balanced and unbalanced outputs. Volume may be adjusted from the handheld remote or the front panel volume control. Thirdly the MCD201 may be used to drive headphones in a stand alone personal system. The front panel mute switch mutes the rear panel outputs when headphone use only is desired.

The MCD201 SACD/CD Player will be officially introduced at CEDIA trade show in Indianapolis, IN. Available through Authorized McIntosh Dealers the MCD201 will ship in November 2005 at a manufacturers suggested retail
